II 次の英文を読み、あとの設問に答えなさい。

Ueno Zoo in Tokyo is expected to receive a pair of giant pandas from China early next year, Tokyo Gov. Shintaro Ishihara said Feb. 13.

Ishihara said the Chinese side has agreed in principle to ([11]) two pandas for $950,000 (¥85 million) a year. The zoo has ([12]) without a panda since the death in April 2008 of Ling Ling, its only giant panda at the time. In 2008, Ishihara described the panda's death as "not something that everyone should cry hard and feel sad about," adding "if you want to see one, you can just go ([13]) there is one and see it."

Male giant panda Ling Ling died aged 22 years and seven months, about 70 years in human terms. He had come to Ueno Zoo in 1992 from China in exchange ([14]) a Japan-born panda to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the normalization of bilateral diplomatic ties.

[15] The endangered giant panda is considered a national treasure in China and the international conservation group WWF estimates there are around 1,600 pandas in the wild.

Ⅲ 次の英文を読み、あとの設問に答えなさい。

SAN FRANCISCO ---Every day, when the main library opens, John Banks is waiting to get inside. He finds a spot and stays until closing time. Then his wheelchair takes him back to the bus terminal where he spends his nights.

Like many homeless public library patrons, all Banks wants is a clean, safe place to sit in peace. He does not want to talk to anyone. He does not want ([17]) to talk to him. The day he decides he wants help, he knows what to do: ask for the library's social worker.

The main branch of the San Francisco Public Library, where hundreds of homeless people spend every day, is the first in the country to keep a full-time social worker on hand, according to the American Library Association.

Cities across the country are trying different approaches to deal with patrons who use bathroom sinks as showers or toilet stalls as drug dens. In Philadelphia and San Francisco, libraries have hired homeless patrons to work as bathroom attendants who guide others to drop-in centers or churches where they can bathe.

In Portland, Oregon, the downtown library is trying a penalty system for patrons who commit infractions--- banishing them from the library for a day for shaving, three years for fighting.

While San Francisco is the first to hire a social worker, other libraries may follow. As the economy languishes and cities shut down social programs, public libraries are becoming repositories for those who have been kicked out and turned away from everywhere else.

Camila Alire, president of the Chicago-based ALA, said that while libraries long have provided refuge for the down-and-out, anecdotal reports underscore that they are dealing with more people than ever with mental health problems and basic needs such as food and shelter.

"Public libraries are trying their best to serve their users and people who have traditionally been nonusers," Alire said. "I hope that what the San Francisco Public Library has done by hiring a social worker serves as a model, because these people are educated and trained to help these patrons who have every ([18]) to use the public library system."

More libraries across the country are hiring therapists to train staff members how to handle stressful patrons. Edmond Otis, a psychotherapist, trains librarians how to talk to patrons who may be mentally ill or on drugs.

"There is a gigantic homeless population that basically 'passes,' except nobody knows where they sleep," Otis said. "That population is growing. But we're looking at the mentally ill and drug addicted. And there are ways of talking to someone." That includes remaining calm, treating all patrons with respect, and setting rules and sticking to them, he said.

Some libraries are dealing with large numbers of destitute patrons.

In San Francisco, the main library, a six-([19]) building with gleaming glass walls, is located in the Civic Center, where many homeless people congregate. It is near a neighborhood of single room occupancy hotels, soup kitchens and other service providers for the very poor. Some mornings, just after it opens, the library seems to have more people who appear to be homeless, wearing some of their clothes and carrying the rest, than not. Frank Bunnell, 53, comes every day carrying a large duffle bag and a blanket. "Sometimes I fall asleep here," he said.

IV 次の対話を読み、あとの設問に答えなさい。

Lisa: So, Paulo, you've been in the Peace Corps two months now, right?

Why did you join?

Paulo: I wanted to help people, and learn about another culture firsthand.

Lisa: And have you accomplished that?

Paulo: Well, I haven't been here long enough to really learn about the people. I hope I'll have learned more about them (25) the end of the year.

Lisa: Has it been hard?

Paulo: Well, one of the most challenging things about living abroad is being far away (26) your friends and family. I write to them almost every day. Oh! You know what's one of the most difficult things? Speaking the local languages.

Lisa: Why is that?

Paulo: I thought I would need to learn just one, but each village has a different dialect or language.

Lisa: Oh, wow. That's got to be difficult.

Paulo: But I'm starting to learn. Some of my new friends are helping me. I feel I've managed to be accepted by the community already.

Lisa: Good for you, that's great.

Paulo: Thanks! And the greatest reward of working with these people is helping them (27) things that they couldn't learn on their own.
