Is there something (18) with the air? Is that burning trash toxic? Those were questions floating around my head during my first visit to Japan.

Everywhere I looked, people were wearing masks. The masks were small, and white, and covered the nose and mouth perfectly. No one else seemed to bat an eyelash over these masks, but to me it was (19).

I had never worn a mask like that in my entire life, or not that I could remember. The only time I saw something (20) was when I watched a TV show set in a hospital. Surgeons wear masks, not regular people, right?

When I saw more and more people with masks, I started covering my mouth. Perhaps they knew something that I didn't. After all, these people lived in this small town, and I was just a visitor. When my Japanese friend noticed me doing this, she laughed. She went (21) to explain that people who had a cold and didn't want to spread their germs to anyone usually wore a mask.

It wasn't until we got back to Tokyo that I realized what a great practice this really was. The trains were packed full of business commuters, students and retirees.

As it is January now, many people have the sniffles. A few people are coughing. I suddenly feel well-protected wearing my mask bought a Japanese drug store. What a wonderful (22), indeed.

Tatsuya : T Jason : J Train staffer : S

T : (inner thoughts) I should have heard back from the client (25) now. I'll send a quick message and ... wait, where is my phone?

J : What are you looking for, Tatsuya?

T : My company phone. I had it this morning, but it's not in my bag.

J : Maybe you left it at your desk. I can call Lin and ask her to go and look if you want.

T : No, that's okay. Actually, I remember (26) it on the train earlier. Do you remember which train we took?

J : It was the 8:15 North-South Line bound (27) Martin Bay. Let's check out the lost and found office and see if they have it.

T : (inner thoughts) I hope they do! There is a lot of important information (28) that phone.

S : How can I help you?

T : Hi, I think I left my phone on the train this morning. I rode the 8:15 train from Newton Station. It's a black flip phone with a strap that says "Tokyo" in Japanese writing.

S : Thank you. Let me check and see if someone turned it in.

T : (inner thoughts) Here's hoping.

S : It looks like someone turned in this phone just a moment ago.

T : That's it! Thank you! What a relief!
